

ABSTRACT

A medical instrument is provided which comprises a first part and a second part which are connected together by a connecting device. The second part abuts on the first part. A cover element which is connected to the first part is disposed on the second part in such a manner that relative movement of the second part away from the first part is blocked by the cover element.